

Megan Glenwright has been a federal public servant since 2014, holding various positions in the public safety profile. She is currently working as a Policy Analyst for Employment and Social Development Canada within the Strategic and Social Service Branch in the Federal Secretariat of Early Learning and Child Care. She was previously a union member of PSAC and is now an active member of the ESDC Local 514 supporting the Executive on issues such as Telework Guidelines, Health and Safety, and Return to Office.

Megan holds a Bachelor of Arts with a Joint Honours in Sociology and Women's Studies from the University of New Brunswick and a Bachelor of Social Work from St. Thomas University. She has also recently completed a Certificate in Influence, Negotiation and Conflict Management from Memorial University.

Megan is particularly interested in supporting positive changes to the workplace so worker's Health and Safety are protected during the on-going airborne COVID-19 pandemic. Megan keeps up-to date with research regarding COVID-19 and Post-COVID Condition (Long COVID) and other public health issues. Megan is a big advocate for cleaner air for all and transparency regarding ventilation in all government buildings.